The people of Poland will receive $2,250,000 in welfare aid from CARE if negotiated plans now under consideration in Warsaw are accepted. Richard W. Reuter, executive director of CARE, announced June 5 in an address before the convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

He was the opening speaker at the federation's International Day which was climaxed by an evening program on which Vice-president Richard M. Nixon spoke and Igor Gorkin, Russian-born American pianist, presented a concert. Mr. Gorkin was later given an ovation by Paul Cunningham, president of the American Society of Editors, Writers, Authors, and Publishers.

Start By July Expected

Mr. Reuter, who had just returned from Europe where he spent 10 days last month negotiating for the return of CARE to Poland, said that he hoped to have the full-scale operation under way again in July. He added that in the four years following World War II, CARE channeled nearly 7 million dollars into Poland. He expressed hope that this would lead the way for the reestablishment of CARE in other Communist countries.
